PLACEMENT & DIRECTION

Where to hang your Dhyana

- North-East (Ishanya)
The corner of stillness and spiritual clarity — ideal in a meditation room, yoga space or pooja corner.
- East
Morning practice and awakening: face the piece as you sit, with the rising sun behind you.
- North
Calm, balanced energy that keeps a bedroom or reading nook peaceful.

Best in a meditation or yoga space, bedroom or a quiet living-room wall. Hang at seated eye level if it faces a practice mat, otherwise at standing eye level; keep the surrounding wall plain so the circle holds the room.

Dhyana · Seat of Balance

A hand-drawn yin-yang mandala for balance, meditation & inner harmony

1 The Two Halves

YIN & YANG

Light curls into dark and dark into light within one circle — the balance of opposites that holds every whole together.

2 The Meditator

SEATED FIGURE

A figure sits in the centre, drawn half in ink and half in light — the self at rest, belonging equally to both halves.

3 Open Hands

MUDRA

Both hands rest on the knees, thumb touching finger — awareness held lightly, receiving and releasing in the same gesture.

4 Sun & Moon

THE TWO SEEDS

A dark disc in the light half and a light disc in the dark — each side carries the seed of the other; nothing is only one thing.

5 The Crescent

CURVED EDGE

The boundary between the halves swells into a crescent moon — change that arrives by phases, never all at once.

6 The Lotus

BELOW THE SEAT

A single lotus rises beneath the meditator — purity growing from still water, and the seat of practice itself.

7 Still Water

WAVE LINES

Gentle ripples run beneath the figure — the calmed mind, where thought settles into a slow, even flow.

8 Patterned Rays

LOWER FIELD

Below the circle, rays filled with dozens of different patterns fan outward — the many textures of active, waking life.

9 The Scaled Sky

UPPER FIELD

Above, ring upon ring of soft scales — an ordered, quiet rhythm, like breath counted in meditation.

10 The Ring

ENCLOSING CIRCLE

A clean circle holds figure, sun, moon and lotus in one embrace — wholeness, and the protected space of inner practice.
